The TROUBLE-SHOOTER

LOOKING VERY MUCH like a glossy black-and-white cat, Selwyn came leaping hopefully along the edge of the blueberry patch in Leafy Forest. Selwyn, however, was not a cat, although he resembled one. Selwyn was a skunk, and a pretty lonesome fellow. He did not live in Leafy Forest, but in another wood, some distance away. But somehow, Selwyn had never been able to make any friends in the woodland where he lived, and so he decided to try his luck and see whether he might meet some new friends in Leafy Forest.

"I'm sure I hear voices," Selwyn said to himself, craning his neck to see who was nearby. "Wow! A whole gang of fellows and they're having a swell time! Oh, if only they'd let me play with them!"

Shyly, Selwyn Skunk came towards the crowd of forest youngsters.

"H...hello," he said.

"Criminies!" yelled Charlie Chipmunk, as he glared at the intruder. "Look who just walked in!"

"A...skunk!" Sid Squirrel exclaimed. "Quick, get him out of here! Chase him away! Make him go!"

"But, fellas, I just want to be friendly and play!" poor Selwyn tried to explain. "You see, I'm pretty lonely back where I live, so I was hoping that you kids would be friends!"

"Well, you were hoping wrong!" Billie Bear growled. "We don't want any skunks hanging around here, so beat it! G'wan! Beat it!" Still growling, he raised a menacing paw and shook it at Selwyn Skunk.

The poor little fellow tried again. "But I'm not...well...dangerous!" he said. "It's just when I'm threatened by an enemy that..."

"Oh, yeah?" growled Billy Bear, "Well, we're not taking any chances, so scram!"

Sadly, Selwyn Skunk lowered his head and turned away. His hopes had been in vain. He would have to go home as lonesome and as friendless as he had set out.

Sighing, he began to trudge back on the path he had taken, when suddenly, he heard a clicking sound. "Mmmmm, I don't like that!" he thought. "If it's what I think it is, I sure don't like it!"

Quickly, the little skunk slid under some leaves and inched forward to see what he could find. "I...I thought so!" he gasped. "Hunters!"

One of the hunters said to the rest, "Okay, we're all loaded up now! Let's go over to the blueberry patch. I think we'll find something there."

The blueberry patch! Selwyn shuddered, for that was the place where the squirrel, chipmunk and bear were playing. "They'll be killed if I don't do something!"

Bravely, Selwyn Skunk rustled the leaves that hid him. The hunters turned and one of them whispered, "There's something over there...I see something moving!" Deliberately, he raised his gun.

"Don't! Don't shoot!" one of the other hunters yelled. "It's...a skunk!"

As one, the hunters turned and fled, running away as if Leafy Forest were on fire. As they went crashing through, Selwyn Skunk heard someone calling softly.

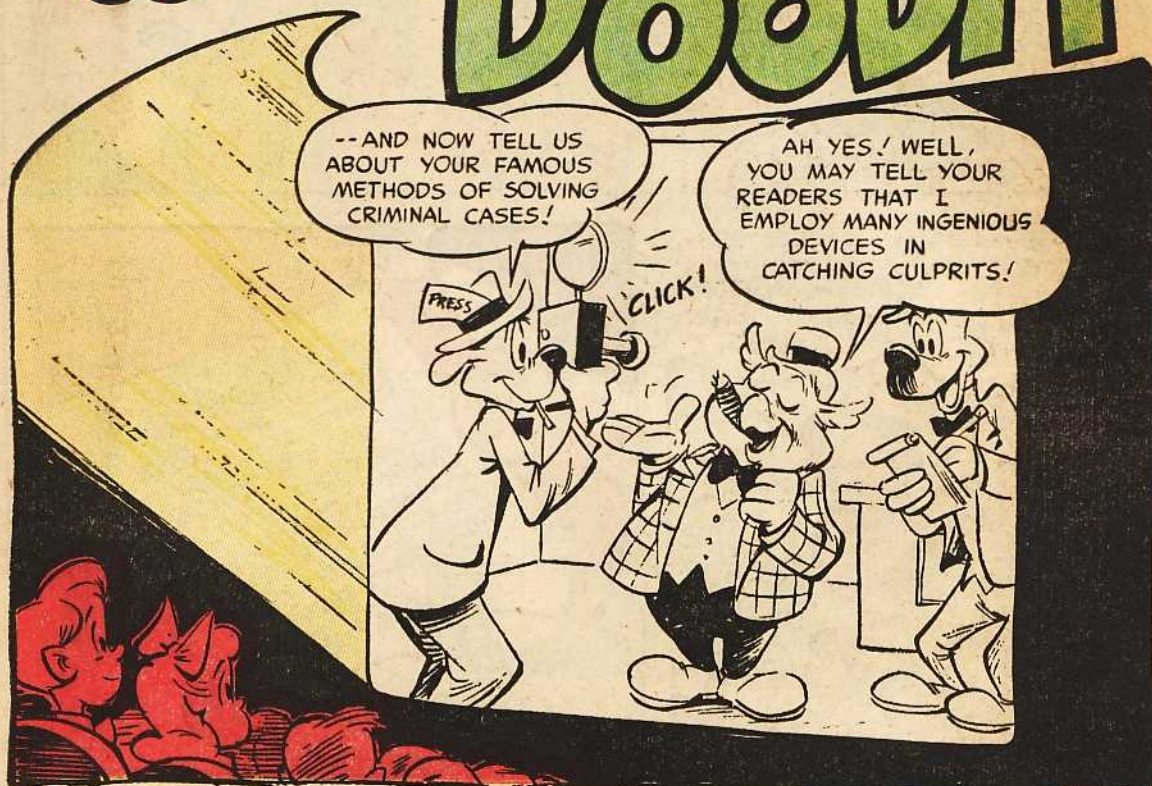

"I...I saw what you did!" Sid Squirrel said, coming down from a tree branch over Selwyn's head. "You did it to save us, didn't you?"

"Aw, I just did it!" the modest skunk replied.

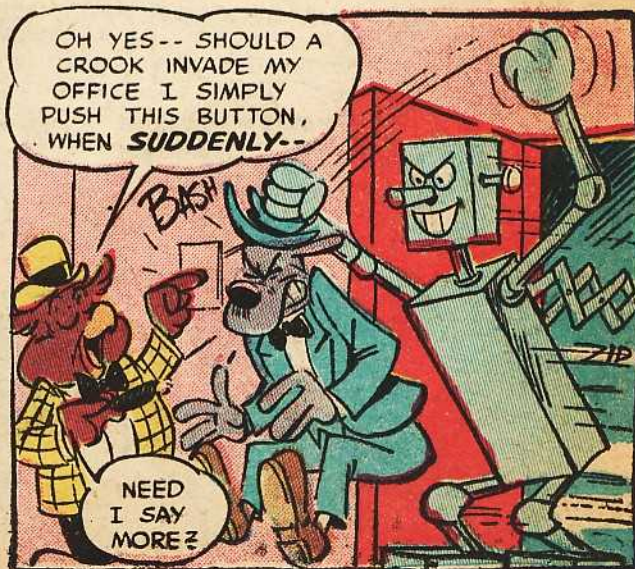

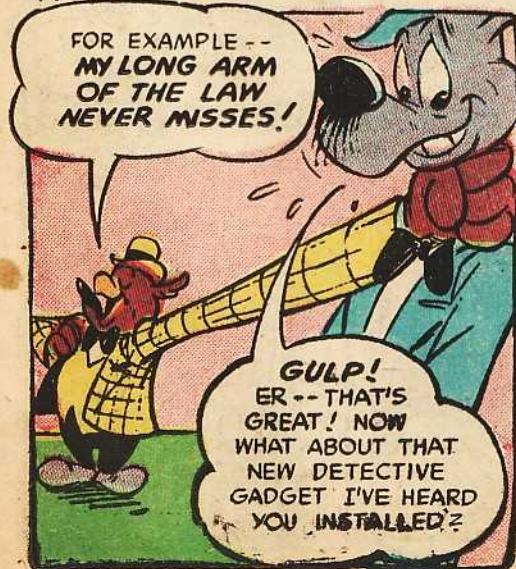

"Well, I know why and I'm going to tell the other kids! You'd better come back with me, because from now on, you've got lots of pals!"

Chow Hound!

BOZO BULLDOG was feeling mighty mean and mighty hungry! Now, Bozo usually felt mean, but when he was hungry, he was the ugliest-tempered dog in Little Town. "Gotta git me some food!" he growled as he went prowling about the alleys of the town, snapping and snarling. "Maybe I can steal some off'n some smaller dog!"

Being naturally mean and vicious, it didn't bother him one bit to think he might be hurting some weaker, smaller animal. But hunt and prowl as he might, he found no one with a scrap or a bone he could nibble on.

"This is bad!" he said to himself, "It's so bad, I might even have to work to get some food! Now, let's see, where'll I go to find some soft job that ...aha!" Bozo's little eyes gleamed as he spied a line of applicants standing patiently in front of a factory door. Over the door was a huge sign that read, "The Best Food in Town!" and on the door was a smaller sign that said, "Help Wanted".

"Whatta break!" Bozo licked his lips at the thought of getting a job in a food factory. "Now, all I gotta do is beat up them punks ahead of me, so's I kin get the job!"

With a tough, rolling stride, he approached the line of applicants. The last on line was a timid little cat who got out of his way at once. But right in front of him was a snarling tomcat who raked his claws across Bozo's face. "Beat it! Scram!" Bozo snarled, yipping and biting, gripping the cat and shaking him furiously.

The cat fought back as best he could, but Bozo was too much for him. Then, one by one, he attacked the others on the line, leaping at their throats, biting, and finally, driving them away. Bozo himself was covered with scratches and bruises as he hammered at the factory door and shouted, "Lemme in! I gets the job, see?"

The factory door opened and a face looked out, smiling coolly. "Sorry," Bozo heard, "but you're in the wrong place! This is a cat food factory!"
